Hence, you can't buy them. They are films made by Marvel Studios for Marvel Studios. If you are referring to the MCU, the recent Marvel movies are not part of the EU. Hence, you can't buy them. They are films made by Marvel Studios for Marvel Studios. I was referring to the merger of the Disney characters and TV properties. There is absolutely nothing to stop us from buying them (or any other Marvel properties). I was referring to the merger of the Disney characters and TV properties. There is absolutely nothing to stop us from buying them (or any other Marvel properties). Correct, I was referring to the merger of the Disney characters and TV properties. There is absolutely nothing to stop us from buying them. I was referring to the "merger" of the MCU characters and TV properties. I do not know why you think you are confused. I was referring to the "merger" of the MCU characters and TV properties. I do not know why you think you are confused. I have not said otherwise. I have no issues with the movie license being bought by MCU as they are not true Disney properties. They are film studio's making their own stories. The same concept applies with any company creating their own TV shows and movies. Yes I am aware of this. The issue is there is no public ownership of a Marvel TV project (Doctor Strange, The Punisher etc) which is at least partially owned by Disney. The same cannot be said for the MCU TV series and films which are owned by Marvel Studios. That may be the case, but Disney owned the TV properties before their acquisition by ABC so I think they can't say anything different than what they said before.Q: c6a93da74d
